What is Australian Environmental History, and how does narrative shape our understanding of Australian Environmental History? This course discusses these questions, as well as others that advance our understanding of the role of environment in Australian history. Questions include: How are environments incorporated into the tool kit of historians? What counts for evidence? Topics include tourism, floods, food, rural and urban environments, acclimatization and the introduction of plant and animal species over the nineteenth century.